What other music apps allow you to set a custom theme from the Google Play Store? Not so much. Poweramp comes with a dark theme and a light theme, with the ability to install as much as you like from outside sources. On top of that, you can change around UI, such as removing the Chromecast button, adding a track counter, changing the rating system, managing animations and more. There are so many options. But the options are nothing if the app itself doesn't Use. It's very easy to use, without any ambiguity about how it functions as a music player. Just open the app, choose how you want to view the music, and then choose songPoweramp featuresPoweramp filled to the brim with features. There are so many that it's honestly hard to keep track of, and menu settings can seem almost daunting at first. If you are on Android, for example, you can search through the track straight from your notifications. Listen to any albums with interludes? You can have Poweramp skip songs in the album's passage, which is below a certain length. There's also having to wakelocking so that Poweramp isn't killed off in the background, automatically downloading album art, automatic resumes when the headset is plugged back in/connected, and more. This is well laid out too, as the features are organized neatly in sections. There's also scrobbling support, Android Auto support, and even the ability to skip songs by long pressing the volume keys (although this feature requires ADB to turn on). Poweramp also gets a pretty decent number of updates, so there are always new features that are added. Just take a look at the changes for the latest versions to get an idea of how big the updates can be. Finally, there is a fantastic equalizer that comes as part of Poweramp that we will talk a lot more about in the next section of TheAudio qualityAudio quality is that Poweramp was known back in the day, along with its solid collection of features. Using its own audio decoders, Poweramp can have consistently high sound quality on all devices. Because it deciphers the audio itself and doesn't rely on the Android system to do any of the work, its equalizer is one of the best in the business. It doesn't need to use the Android audio equalizer API instead by applying the changes that the user chooses for the decrypted thread. What's more, there are many changes that the user can make. There are many different equalizer presets too, so the user can customize it to their own listening style.
